

Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College and was elected professor in that department in 1900. The following year he was elected professor of surgical anatomy, which chair he still holds. Dr. Trego is engaged in general practice in Cleveland, being on the staff of the Cleveland Homœopathic Hospital, the Cleveland City Hospital and physician to the Eliza Jennings Home, a charitable institution of that city. He is a member of various societies and organizations and is active in his profession.

Harris H. Baxter was born in 1846, his early education being obtained in the common schools and later at the Highland Military Academy, Wor-chester, Massachusetts. He immediately entered upon the study of medicine, graduating from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1868. Two years later he was appointed professor of materia medica, a position he held for almost thirty years.

Charles C. True, M. D.

He was intensely interested in college work, and during all the years of his connection with the college was a vital factor in its management. For a number of years he held the position of registrar in addition to his professorship, his conduct of that office being an index of the executive ability of the man. Immediately upon graduating he became a member of the American Institute of Homœopathy and the Ohio State Homœopathic Medical Society, as well as of local societies. In these he has been active and has contributed much to their strength.

Upon the organization of the Ohio State Board of Medical Registration, Dr. Baxter was appointed one of its members and has retained the position ever since. It was due to this fact and the demands made upon him by his active practice that several years ago he resigned his professorship. For two years, however, he has given a course of lectures upon the organon and principles of medicine, a subject which he is well qualified to discuss.

Henry Clay White, A. M., LL.B., was born in 1839. His education was obtained in the public schools and later at Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, from which he graduated while the late President Garfield was its president. Afterward he attended the law department of the University of Michigan, graduating in 1862. He located in Cleveland in 1887, being elected probate judge of Cuyahoga county, and being re-elected to that position five times for terms of three years each. In 1890 Judge White was appointed vice-president of the board of trustees of the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College, and two years later became its president.

N. T. B. Nobles, M. D.

For many years before his death, which occurred January 15, 1905, he held the professorship of medical jurisprudence, making that department one of the most prominent in the curriculum. That he was a strong man in all respects goes without saying. By every student he taught, by every professor with whom he was associated, he was respected and beloved. He was an ideal college president and teacher.

John B. Woodworth graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1893, becoming almost immediately connected with the college, and in several years following doing splendid work in the departments of physical diagnosis and nose and throat.

Frank Kraft was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1851. His education was obtained in the public schools, after which he went into general business. In 1876 he began the study of law, but did not complete his course. In 1886 he graduated from the Homœopathic Medical College of Missouri. He practiced a short time in St. Louis, removing thence to Ann Arbor, Michigan, for six months assuming the editorial management of the "Medical Advance."

William Edgar Trego, M. D.

The next year he removed to Sylvania, Ohio, where he practiced until 1889, when he was called to Cleveland to take the professorship of materia medica in the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College. He held this position almost continuously until 1896. A more detailed account of Dr. Kraft's professional and journalistic career will be found in another volume of this work.

W. E. Wells, M. D., graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1886. He became connected with the college later, serving in various positions, and finally becoming professor of medica and surgical diseases of the rectum, a position he held until his growing practice made it necessary for him to resign. He is still in active practice in Cleveland.

William T. Miller was born in 1855, receiving his early education in the common schools. In 1878 he graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College, having been a student of Prof. Nathaniel Schneider, who at that time held the professorship of surgery. Dr. Miller was appointed house physician in the Emergency Hospital and also demonstrator of anatomy in his alma mater. Later he was house physician to the Cleveland Homœopathic Hospital. He was appointed assistant to Prof. Schneider in the department of surgery in the college, later being advanced to a professorship. He is at present professor of surgery and registrar of the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College. He is a member of various organizations in the city of Cleveland and has a large surgical practice.

Harris H. Baxter, M. D.

Kent B. Waite was born in 1862, his education being obtained in the public schools and high school, Hudson Preparatory School, and Adelbert College of Western Reserve University. From this institution he graduated in 1886, with the degree of A. B., three years later receiving the degree of A. M. as a sequence.

He entered upon the study of medicine, graduating in 1888. He was demonstrator of anatomy two years and then professor in the same department. In 1892 he was made professor of genito-urinary surgery, and later professor of general surgery. He continued his work in the college until failing health compelled his resignation. Dr. Waite was an able man in many ways. He was editor of two of the medical journals issued by the college, and is the author of a monograph on genito-urinary surgery, a anatomy, a position he holds at the present time. He is also treasurer of the college, serving his second year.

De Forrest Baker graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1878, and during his long practice—principally in Cleveland—has been on the faculty in various positions. His principal work, however, was done as professor of pediatrics, a position which he held for a number of years, and also as professor of obstetrics.

Clarence S. Cutter graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1894, since which time he has held a number of positions on the faculty, his principal work being done in the department of theory and practice, where he has been clinical professor of paediatrics.

John Kent Sanders, A. M., M. D.

George E. Turrill graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1879, and was prominent among its professors for a number of years, his positions being professor of theory and practice with special reference to diseases of the chest, and professor of laryngology and rhinology.

E. R. Eggleston graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1875. While in active practice since graduation has been most of the time at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, he has been called several times by the faculty to serve as professor, chiefly in the department of theory and practice, where he was recognized as one of the best men ever lecturing in that branch.

F. O. Reeve, A. M., graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1894. His first appointment was as a lecturer on pharmacy, but later he received the appointment of professor of materia medica, which position he held for a number of years.

Clifton D. Ellis graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1883. He has served it faithfully, principally in the department of surgery, where he was appointed professor of minor surgery, lecturing upon that subject for a number of years. He is still in active practice, but the pressure of private work is such as to prohibit college service.

O. B. Moss was born in 1845, his early life spent on a farm in New York state. He early gave evidence of an active mind and improved the few advantages of the country so as to fit himself for teaching. Later he entered a business college at Flint, Michigan, becoming one of its teachers. While engaged in that capacity he began the study of medicine, attending the University of Michigan one term, later coming to the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College, from which he graduated in 1870. Later he gave up the practice of medicine, attended Oberlin College for a time, and finally went to Allegheny College, Meadville, Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated in 1879 with the degree of A. B.

B. F. Gamber, M. D.

In 1882 he was made professor of physiology and microscopical anatomy in his alma mater, later relinquishing this position to move to Topeka, and afterward going to Kansas City. He removed from there to Iowa and afterward to Grand Rapids, in which place he died June 27, 1901.

Dr. Moss was a man of ability. He was the author of three books, one entitled "Beauty, Health and Strength for Every Woman," another "Before the Mirror, or Sex Laws Revealed," and the other, "A Comparative Materia Medica."

Martha A. Canfield, A. M., was born in 1845, and is a graduate of Oberlin College. She studied medicine in 1870 under Dr. Charles Morrill of Cleveland, graduating in 1875, having stood highest in her class. She immediately located in Cleveland, where she is still in general practice.

Dr. Canfield has had large experience in private hospital work, having had for a number of years a sanitarium at Blue Rock Springs, near Cleveland, and later a private hospital in the city. In 1890 she was appointed to the chair of diseases of women in the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College, and at the end of two years was made full professor. Her work along this line gave her such prominence that in 1893 she was chosen to deliver an address before the World's Congress of Homœopathic Physicians and Surgeons, an honor which placed her in the front rank in her profession.

Recently, under the strain of excessive work, her health became broken and she resigned the professorship in the college and the work she was doing in the Maternity Hospital and the Women's and Children's Dispensary, and spent several years abroad, this being her second trip to the old world. Lately she has returned and has taken up practice, resuming her work in the hospitals and dispensary where she had formerly been so successful.

Arthur F. Baldinger, M. D.

Justin E. Rowland was born in 1864. He is a graduate of the classical department of Oberlin College, having taken a four years' course. He graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1891, locating in South Euclid, where he has since practiced. He has been professor of materia medica in his alma mater and is a member of a number of local societies.

Josephine M. Danforth was born in Dover, Ohio, in 1874. She attended the public schools and high school, graduating therefrom, and in 1897 took her degree in medicine from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College. She then served three years as resident in the Woman's Homœopathic Hospital, Philadelphia, making a special study of pathology. Upon her return to Cleveland, where she located, she was appointed lecturer on bacteriology, histology and pathology, and later lecturer on dietetics in her alma mater. She is chief of the Children's Clinic in the Good Samaritan Dispensary and a member of the visiting staff of the Woman's and Children's Free Dispensary of Cleveland. She is pathologist to the Cleveland Homœopathic Hospital and member of the staff of the Women's Homœopathic Association of Philadelphia.

William H. Phillips was born in Ohio in 1871. He early removed to Cleveland, where he received his education in the common schools and high school. He graduated from the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1893, and the following year received the appointment of lecturer on anatomy. This position he retained two years. In 1901 he was appointed lecturer on otology and laryngology, and in 1903 was advanced to the full professorship. He is chief of the department of nose and throat in the Good Samaritan Dispensary; laryngologist to the Cleveland Homœopathic Hospital and also to the Cleveland City Hospital, and president of the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical Society. Dr. Phillips spent the first years of

De Forrest Baker, M. D.