

By George Douglas

THE HOUSE WITH THE
GREEN SHUTTERS

THE first novel of a new master. The work has gained wide-spread recognition on both sides of the water. Three of the most conservative and authoritative publications in England include it among the first twelve of the year. In this country Harper's Weekly gives it as one of the two most interesting novels of the year.

The critics differ as to with what other master George Douglas should be compared:

The London Times says: "Worthy of the hand that drew 'Weir of Hermiston,'" and that "Balzac and Flaubert, had they been Scotch, would have written such a book."

The Spectator: "His masters are Zola and Balzac, but there are few traces of the novice and none of the imitator."

Vanity Fair: "It moves to its end with all the terrible unity of an Æschylean tragedy."

Harper's Weekly: "If Thomas Hardy had written of Scotland, instead of Wessex, it would have been something like 'The House with the Green Shutters' . . . If any man is his (Douglas') master it is Thomas Hardy."

Hardy, Stevenson, Zola, Flaubert, Balzac, and Æschylus.

By A. Conan Doyle

Author of "The Great Boer War"

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA

ITS CAUSE AND CONDUCT

DR. DOYLE served several months as a surgeon in South Africa and is thoroughly familiar with the situation there. He feels that there are many who misunderstand Great Britain's attitude in the conflict. It is in order to set these people right—in order "to combat the flood of lies which have pervaded the world about British policy and British soldiers," as he himself puts it—that he has written this small book, "The War; Its Cause and Conduct."

It is at Dr. Doyle's request that we now place this book on sale at the mere cost of printing. In this way, the author hopes, his carefully gathered mass of testimony will set Great Britain aright in every nook and corner of the United States.

THE GREAT BOER WAR

As the Chicago Evening Post says:

"It presents so authentic and comprehensive an history of the great conflict, with such graphic vividness in the narrative and picturesque effect, that it is pretty sure to remain a sort of standard authority."

W. G. H. Koenneker, who fought on the Boer side, read the book while a prisoner in Ceylon.

"He (Dr. Doyle) weighs each party's share in the bringing about of the war with admirable impartiality and fairness," Mr. Koenneker writes. "In his description of the Boers storming right up to the British rifles with supreme dash, or of a small British garrison keeping an exposed position, an open townlet, against overwhelming odds with downright bulldog tenacity, one seems to read a tale of knightly time of old and not an episode of our modern century of crass materialism. Surely such books are not written in vain, and will be read by generations to come on both sides. Honor to the man who wrote 'The Great Boer War' in the way he did, while the din of battle was still filling the air."

Two New Books

THE MADNESS OF PHILIP

AND OTHER STORIES OF CHILDHOOD

By Josephine Dodge Daskam

Illustrated by F. Y. Cory.

IT would be hard to decide which of Miss Daskam's little heroes and heroines is the most attractive. There is Philip who demoralized the kindergarten class; Edgar, the Choir Boy Uncelestial; Ardelia who didn't like Arcady, and the little beau who dreamed that he went to dancing-school and that he "was the only fellow there and all the little girls were Cecilia." Miss Cory has caught the spirit of the stories admirably in her illustrations. $1.50.

RED SAUNDERS

HIS DOINGS WEST AND EAST

By H. W. Phillips

RED SAUNDERS is not the misconception of an American cowboy usually found in fiction. He is a "sure enough live" cow puncher, brimful of keen Western humor, and capable of performing mighty interesting stunts, whether in the East or West. $1.25.

TRISTRAM OF BLENT

AS sparkling as the "Dolly Dialogues."

As enthralling as "The Prisoner of Zenda."

"Mr. Hope's most mature and most artistic work."

—The Book Buyer.

"A powerful novel by one of the great masters in literature."—Boston Times.

"It is a notable book."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"It takes hold of the reader and he cannot put it down until he has read the last chapter."—N. Y. Tribune.

"'Tristram of Blent' is quite different from the 'Prisoner of Zenda,' but it is quite as interesting, while much more satisfactory and complete; and whereas the sword-play and the glitter of the courts is missing, its reality more than makes up for the omission."

—Philadelphia Telegraph.

"The character studies in the book are admirable. Not only the main figures are treated with consummate art; there is not a person in the book, however unimportant to the furtherance of the main action, but receives the touch which gives life, which suggests a type without sacrificing the individual. . . . It stands as a revelation of the fulness of Mr. Hope's resources, his grasp of plot and character and construction. . . . In workmanship it ranks with his best as an exposition of the maturity of his art."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

THE BLAZED TRAIL

A TALE from beyond the bounds of civilization. The second in Mr. White's series of thoroughly American stories.

The inspiring breath of the great pine woods is in this dramatic novel of frontier struggle in which a green "land looker" plays a lone hand against a powerful and unscrupulous land company for a vast tract of timber land.

By the same author:

THE WESTERNERS

MR. WHITE shows us the rough-and-ready life of a Western mining camp.

"THE WESTERNERS' lays strong hold on the reader. The thing is vital. There is a force and a sincerity distinctly Western—of the frontier; the grim naturalness of elemental things. Furthermore Mr. White knows his West, his plains, his Indians and his mining camps."
—Chicago Record-Herald.
