tached to the party now in power, with whom she in the village one morning by five o'clock, to maintained a close correspondence and alliance, and that she hated, without fearing, the Ravenswood family (whose more ancient dignity threw the prospect of altogether crushing that of her enemy.

But Lady Ashton was now absent. The busi- beyond the possibility of farther doubt. ness which had long detained her in Edinburgh. had afterwards induced her to travel to London, not without the hope that she might contribute quis at court; for she stood high in favor with the celebrated Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, to whom, in point of character, she bore considerable resemblance. It was necessary to press her husband hard before her return; and, as a preparatory step, the Marquis wrote to the Master of Ravenswood the letter which we rehearsed in a former chapter. It was cautiously worded, so as to leave it in the power of the writer hereafter to quite so favorable to the Lord Keeper as those of take as deep, or as slight an interest in the fortunes of his kinsman, as the progress of his own schemes might require. But however unwilling, as a statesman, the Marquis might be to commit himself, or assume the character of a patron, think, that in the House to which his lawsuits while he had nothing to give away, it must be said to his honor, that he felt a strong inclination vail in Scotland which was too well recognized in effectually to be riend the Master of Ravenswood, former times,-"Show me the man, and I'll show as well as to use his name as a means of alarming you the law." The high and unbiassed character the terrors of the Lord Keeper.

regret for the necessary loss of time, and in the vehemence of his impatience, give it to be under-Marquis of A- to the Master of Ravenswood, upon a matter of life and death.

prising short time in which he had executed his but in private Lockhard received orders to watch the courier on his return, to waylay him in the village, to ply him with liquor if possible, and to use all means, fair or foul, to learn the contents his plot had been foreseen, the messenger returned by a different and distant road, and thus escaped the snare that was laid for him.

inquiry among his clients of Wolf's-hope, whether such a domestic belonging to the Marquis of A-This was easily ascertained; for Caleb had been prove its own reward?"

"borrow twa chappins of ale and a kipper" for the messenger's refreshment, and the poor fellow had been ill for twenty-four hours at Luckie discredit on the newly-acquired grandeur of her Sma'trash's, in consequence of dining upon "sant husband), to such a degree, that she would have saumon and sour drink." So that the existence perilled the interest of her own house, to have of a correspondence betwixt the Marquis and his distressed kinsman, which Sir William Ashton had sometimes treated as a bugbear, was proved

The alarm of the Lord Keeper became very serious. Since the Claim of Rights, the power of appealing from the decisions of the civil court to her share to disconcert the intrigues of the Mar- the Estates of Parliament, which had formerly been held incompetent, had in many instances been claimed, and in some allowed, and he had no small reason to apprehend the issue, if the English House of Lords should be disposed to act upon an appeal from the Master of Ravenswood "for remeid in law." It would resolve into an equitable claim, and be decided, perhaps, upon the broad principles of instice, which were not strict law. Besides, judging, though most inaccurately, from courts which he had himself known in the unhappy times preceding the Scottish Union, the Keeper might have too much right to were to be transferred, the old maxim might preof English judicial proceedings was then little As the messenger who carried this letter was known in Scotland; and the extension of them to to pass near the house of the Lord Keeper, he had that country was one of the most valuable advanit in direction, that, in the village adjoining to tages which it gained by the Union. But this was the park-gate of the castle, his horse should lose .a blessing which the Lord Keeper, who had lived a shoe, and that, while it was replaced by the under another system, could not have the means smith of the place, he should express the utmost of foreseeing. In the loss of his political consequence, he anticipated the loss of his lawsuit. Meanwhile, every report which reached him stood, that he was bearing a message from the served to render the success of the Marquis's intrigues the more probable, and the Lord Keeper began to think it indispensable that he should This news, with exaggerations, was speedily look round for some kind of protection against carried from various quarters to the ears of the the coming storm. The timidity of his temper Lord Keeper, and each reporter dwelt upon the induced him to adopt measures of compromise extreme impatience of the courier, and the sur- and conciliation. The affair of the wild bull, properly managed, might, he thought, be made journey. The anxious statesman heard in silence; to facilitate a personal communication and reconciliation betwixt the Master and himself. He would then learn, if possible, what his own ideas were of the extent of his rights, and the means of enforcing them; and perhaps matters might be of the letter of which he was the bearer. But as brought to a compromise, where one party was wealthy, and the other so very poor. A reconciliation with Ravenswood was likely to give him an opportunity to play his own game with the After he had been in vain expected for some Marquis of A-, "And besides," said he to time, Mr. Dingwall had orders to make especial himself, "it will be an act of generosity to raise up the heir of this distressed family; and if he is to be warmly and effectually befriended by the had actually arrived at the neighboring castle. new government, who knows but my virtue may with a hue of virtue; and having attained this havior. point, his fancy strayed still further. He began bitter regret."

occupying his head, the Lord Keeper availed him- tress of a family to superintend in person the exself of my Lord Bittlebrains's repeated invitation ecution of the lambs and poultry which are killed to his residence, and thus came within a very few miles of Wolf's Crag. Here he found the Lord of he thought of the alternative of restoring to Rathe mansion absent, but was courteously received venswood a large proportion of his spoils, or of by the lady, who expected her husband's imme- adopting, as an ally and member of his own famdiate return. She expressed her particular delight ily, the heir of this impoverished house, he felt at seeing Miss Ashton, and appointed the hounds as the spider may be supposed to do, when his to be taken out for the Lord Keeper's special whole web, the intricacies of which had been amusement. He readily entered into the pro- planned with so much art, is destroyed by the posal, as giving him an opportunity to recon- chance sweep of a broom. And then, if he should noitre Wolf's Crag, and perhaps to make some commit himself too far in this matter, it gave rise acquaintance with the owner, if he should be to a perilous question which many a good hustempted from his desolate mansion by the chase. band, when under temptation to act as a free Lockhard had his orders to endeavor on his part agent, has asked himself without being able to to make some acquaintance with the inmates of return a satisfactory answer: "What will my the castle, and we have seen how he played his wife-what will Lady Ashton say?" On the Lord Keeper's plan of forming a personal ac- uge. He resolved to watch events, to take advanquaintance with young Ravenswood, than his tage of circumstances as they occurred, and regumost sanguine expectations could have antici- late his conduct accordingly. In this spirit of sonal resentment had greatly decreased, since he mind to rest. considered him as formidable from his legal claims, and the means he might have of enforcing them. But although he thought, not unreasonably, that only desperate circumstances drove men on desperate measures, it was not without a secret terror, which shook his heart within him, that he first felt himself enclosed within the desolate Tower of Wolf's Crag; a place so well fitted, from solitude and strength, to be a scene of vioence and vengeance. The stern reception at first given to them by the Master of Ravenswood, and the difficulty he felt in explaining to that injured nobleman what guests were under the shelter of court-yard shut behind him with violence, the pide their time to be avenged."

The subsequent frankness of the Master's not be bent to without a struggle. hospitality, as their acquaintance increased, abated the apprehensions these recollections were was resolved it should not have time again to

Thus thought Sir William Ashton, covering William Ashton, that it was to Lucy's grace and with no unusual self-delusion his interested views beauty he owed the change in their host's be-

All these thoughts thronged upon him when to bethink himself, "that if Ravenswood was to he took possession of the secret chamber. The have a distinguished place of power and trust- iron lamp, the unfurnished apartment, more re and if such a union should sopite the heavier part sembling a prison than a place of ordinary repose, of his unadjusted claims—there might be worse the hoarse and ceaseless sound of the waves rushmatches for his daughter Lucy-the Master might ing against the base of the rock on which the casbe reponed against the attainder-Lord Ravens- tle was founded, saddened and perplexed his wood was an ancient tit.e, and the alliance would, mind. To his own successful machinations, the in some measure, legitimate his own possession ruin of the family had been in a great measure of the greater part of the Master's spoils, and owing, but his disposition was crafty and not make the surrender of the rest a subject of less cruel; so that actually to witness the desolation and distress he had himself occasioned, was as With these mingled and multifarious plans painful to him as it would be to the humane misby her own directions. At the same time, when whole, he came at length to the resolution in The accidental storm did more to farther the which minds of a weaker cast so often take refpated. His fear of the young nobleman's per- temporizing policy, he at length composed his

CHAPTER XVI.

"A slight note I have about me for you, for the delivery of which you must excuse me. It is an offer that friendship calls upon me to do, and no way offensive to you, since I desire nothing but right upon both sides."

KING AND NO KING.

WHEN Ravenswood and his guest met in the morning, the gloom of the Master's spirit had in part returned. He, also, had passed a night rather of reflection than of slumber; and the feelings which he could not but entertain towards his roof, did not soothe these alarms; so that Lucy Ashton, had to support a severe conflict when Sir William Ashton heard the door of the against those which he had so long nourished against her father. To clasp in friendship the words of Alice rung in his ears, "that he had hand of the enemy of his house, to entertain him drawn on matters too hardly with so fierce a race under his roof, to exchange with him the courteas those of Ravenswood, and that they would sies and the kindness of domestic familiarity, was a degradation which his proud spirit could

But the ice being once broken, the Lord Keeper calculated to excite; and it did not escape Sir freeze. It had been part of his plan to stun and and technical statement of the matters which had may in a great measure have mistaken your perbeen in debate betwixt their families, justly sonal character, and that things may have apthinking that it would be difficult for a youth of his age to follow the expositions of a practical lawyer, concerning actions of compt and reckoning, and of multiplepoindings, and adjudications and wadsets, proper and improper, and poindings of the ground, and declarations of the expiry of the legal. Thus, thought Sir William, I shall have all the grace of appearing perfectly communicative, while my party will derive very little advantage from anything I may tell him. He therefore took Ravenswood aside into the deep recess of a window in the hall, and resuming the discourse of the preceding evening, expressed a hope that his young friend would assume some patience, in order to hear him enter into a minute willing to listen to the old lawyer, while, at least, and explanatory detail of those unfortunate cir- he explains the points of difference betwixt cumstances, in which his late honorable father them?" had stood at variance with the Lord Keeper. The Master of Ravenswood colored highly, but was silent; and the Lord Keeper, though not greatly approving the sudden heightening of his auditor's complexion, commenced the history of a bond for twenty thousand marks, advanced by his father, to the father of Allan Lord Ravenswood, and was proceeding to detail the executorial proceedings by which this large sum had been ren- of generations, as the pawn of a wretched medered a debitum fundi, when he was interrupted hear Sir William Ashton's explanation of the matters in question between us. It is not here, can with decency or temper investigate the cause gar Ravenswood-I shall still have my sword and of his distress. I might remember that I was a son, and forget the duties of a host. A time, however, there must come, when these things shall be discussed in a place, and in a presence, where both of us will have equal freedom to speak and to hear."

"Any time," the Lord Keeper said, "any place, was alike to those who sought nothing but justice. Yet it would seem he was, in fairness, entitled to some premonition respecting the grounds upon which the Master proposed to impugn the whole train of legal proceedings, which had been so well and ripely advised in the only courts competent."

"Sir William Ashton," answered the Master, with warmth, "the lands which you now occupy were granted to my remote ancestor for services done with his sword against the English invaders. How they have glided from us by a train of proceedings that seem to be neither sale, nor mortgage, nor adjudication for debt, but a nondescript and entangled mixture of all these rights-how annual rent has been accumulated upon principal. and no nook or coign of legal advantage left unoccupied, until our interest in our hereditary property seems to have melted away like an icicle in thaw-all this you understand better than I do. I am willing, however, to suppose, from the sufficiently explained.

confuse Ravenswood's ideas, by a complicated frankness of your conduct towards me, that I peared right and fitting to you, a skilful and practised lawyer, which to my ignorant understand, ing seem very little short of injustice and gross oppression."

"And you, my dear Master," answered Sir William, "you, permit me to say, have been equally misrepresented to me. I was taught to believe you a fierce, imperious, hot-headed vonth ready, at the slightest provocation, to throw your sword into the scales of justice, and to appeal to those rude and forcible measures from which civil polity has long protected the people of Scotland Then, since we were mutually mistaken in each other, why should not the young nobleman be "No, my lord," answered Ravenswood; "it is in the House of British Peers,* whose honor must be equal to their rank-it is in the court of last resort that we must parley together. The belted lords of Britain, her ancient peers, must decide, if it is their will that a house, not the least noble of their members, shall be stripped of their possessions, the reward of the patriotism chanic becomes forfeit to the usurer the instant the hour of redemption has passed away. If they "It is not in this place," he said, "that I can yield to the grasping severity of the creditor, and to the gnawing usury that eats into our lands as moths into a raiment, it will be of more evil conwhere my father died of a broken heart, that I sequence to them and their posterity than to Edmy cloak, and can follow the profession of arms wherever a trumpet shall sound."

As he pronounced these words, in a firm yet

* The power of appeal from the Court of Session, the supreme Judges of Scotland, to the Scottish Parliament, in cases of civil right, was fiercely debated before the Union. It was a privilege highly desirable for the subject, as the examination and occasional reversal of their sentences in Parliament might serve as a check upon the judges, which they greatly required at a time when they were much more distinguished for legal knowledge than for uprightness and integrity.

The members of the Faculty of Advocates (so the Scottish barristers are termed), in the year 1674, incurred the violent displeasure of the Court of Session, on account of their refusal to renounce the right of appeal to Parliament; and, by a very arbitrary procedure, the majority of the number were banished from Edinburgh, and consequently deprived of their profes sional practice for several sessions, or terms. But, by the articles of the Union, an appeal to the British House of Peers has been secured to the Scottish subject, and that right has, no doubt, had its influence in forming the impartial and independent character which, much contrary to the practice of their predecessors, the Judges of the Court of Session have since dis-

It is easy to conceive, that an old lawyer, like the Lord Keeper in the text, should feel alarm at the judgments given in his favor, upon grounds of strict penal law, being brought to appeal under a new and dreaded procedure in a Court eminently impartial, and peculiarly moved by considerations of

In earlier editions of this work, this legal distinction was not melancholy tone, he raised his eyes, and suddenly looks fastened on them with an expression of suld let into this castle." enthusiastic interest and admiration, which had covery. The noble form and fine features of wood. Ravenswood, fired with the pride of birth and pressive tones of his voice, the desolate state of posed to dwell upon recollections connected with within these walls." him. When their eyes encountered each other, both blushed deeply, conscious of some strong internal emotion, and shunned again to meet each other's looks.

RAVENSWOOD AND SIR WILLIAM ASHTON. Bride of Lammermoor, p. 68.

Sir William Ashton had, of course, closely liament nor protestation; I have an effectual mode of reconciling myself with this hot-tempered young fellow, in case he shall become formidable. The present object is, at all events, to avoid com- ordered the gates to be opened. "I suppose," he mitting ourselves. The hook is fixed; we will not strain the line too soon-it is as well to re- weighty matters betwixt you and me, but may be serve the privilege of slipping it loose, if we do discussed in this place. I have company in the not find the fish worth landing."

In this selfish and cruel calculation upon the supposed attachment of Ravenswood to Lucy, part of them." he was so far from considering the pain he might give to the former, by thus dallying with his affections, that he even did not think upon the risk of involving his own daughter in the perils tion," he said, "to force himself on the Master of of an unfortunate passion; as if her predilection, Ravenswood's hospitality-he was in the honorwhich could not escape his attention, were like able service of bearing a message to him from a the flame of a taper, which might be lighted or friend, otherwise the Master of Ravenswood extinguished at pleasure: But Providence had prepared a dreadful requital for this keen observer intrusion.' of human passions, who had spent his life in securing advantages to himself by artfully work- that will be the best apology. Who is the gentleing upon the passions of others.

Caleb Balderston now came to announce that as a messenger?" breakfast was prepared; for, in those days of silversmith's in Edinburgh, for the purpose of being overlaid with gilt.

wood; "but in what place, or for what purpose, castle, when I shall give attendance as umpire, or I am afraid neither you nor I know."

"Aweel!" said Caleb, peevishly, "there's a man standing at the gate already this morningwhether ye will speak wi' him or no?"

"Does he wish to speak with me, Caleb?"

"Less will not serve him," said Caleb; "but encountered those of Lucy Ashton, who had stolen ye had best take a visic of him through the wicket unawares on their interview, and observed her before opening the gate-it's no every ane we

"What! do you suppose him to be a messenwrapt her for a moment beyond the fear of dis- ger come to arrest me for debt?" said Ravens-

"A messenger arrest your honor for debt, and sense of internal dignity-the mellow and ex- in your castle of Wolf's Crag !-Your honor is jesting wi' auld Caleb this morning." However, his fortunes, and the indifference with which he he whispered in his ear as he followed him out, seemed to endure and to dare the worst that "I would be loath to do ony decent man a prejumight befall, rendered him a dangerous object of dice in your honor's gude opinion; but I would contemplation for a maiden already too much dis- tak twa looks o' that chield before I let him

He was not an officer of the law, however; being no less a person than Captain Craigengelt, with his nose as red as a comfortable cup of brandy could make it, his laced cocked-hat set a little aside upon the top of his black riding periwatched the expression of their countenances. wig, a sword by his side, and pistols at his hol-"I need fear," said he internally, "neither Par-sters, and his person arrayed in a riding suit, laid over with tarnished lace,-the very moral of one who would say, Stand, to a true man.

When the Master had recognised him, he said, "Captain Craigengelt, there are no such castle at present, and the terms upon which we last parted must excuse my asking you to make Craigengelt, although possessing the very perfection of impudence, was somewhat abashed by this unfavorable reception. "He had no intenshould not have had reason to complain of this

"Let it be short, sir," said the Master, "for man who is so fortunate as to have your services

"My friend Mr. Hayston of Bucklaw," ansubstantial feeding, the relics of the supper amply swered Craigengelt, with conscious importance, furnished forth the morning meal. Neither did and that confidence which the acknowledged he forget to present to the Lord Keeper, with great courage of his principal inspired, "who conceives reverence, a morning-draught in a large pewter himself to have been treated by you with somecup, garnished with leaves of parsley and scurvy- thing much short of the respect which he had grass. He craved pardon, of course, for having reason to demand, and therefore is resolved to omitted to serve it in the great silver standing exact satisfaction. I bring with me," said he, cup as behoved, being that it was at present in a taking a piece of paper out, of his pocket, "the precise length of his sword; and he requests you will meet him, accompanied by a friend, and "In Edinburgh like enough," said Ravens- equally armed, at any place within a mile of the second, on his behoof."

"Satisfaction-and equal arms!" repeated Ravenswood, who, the reader will recollect, had that's ae thing that I ken-Does your honor ken no reason to suppose he had given the slightest offence to his late inmate-"upon my word, Captain Craigengelt, either you have invented the most improbable falsehood that ever came into the mind of such a person, or your morning court-yard after this dialogue, he found that the draught has been somewhat of the strongest. Lord Keeper had descended from the hall, and What could persuade Bucklaw to send me such a witnessed, though at the distance prescribed by message?"

"For that, sir," replied Craigengelt, "I am desired to refer you to what, in duty to my friend, gentleman's face, and at no great distance of I am to term your inhospitality in excluding him time—his name is Craig—Craig—something, is it from your house without reasons assigned."

"It is impossible," replied the Master: "he cessity as an insult. Nor do I believe that, present." knowing my opinion of you, Captain, he would errand, as I certainly could expect no man of honor to act with you in the office of umpire."

gelt, raising his voice and laving his hand on cravat yet." his cutlass; "if it were not that the quarrel of my friend craves the precedence, and is in de- leb," said the Keeper, smiling; "I assure you pendence before my own, I would give you to un- the gentleman has been near such a consumma tion, Captain Craigengelt. Be satisfied of that, about a fortnight ago to Edinburgh, I saw Mr. and oblige me with your departure."

"D-n!" muttered the bully; "and is this severe examination before the Privy Council." the answer which I am to carry back to an honorable message ?"

"Tell the Laird of Bucklaw," answered Ravenswood, "if you are really sent by him, that the Lord Keeper had been very anxious to introwhen he sends me his cause of grievance by duce, when he could find a graceful and fitting a person fitting to carry such an errand betwixt opportunity. He took hold of the Master's arm, him and me, I will either explain it or main-returned to Hayston, by my hands, his property ear." which is remaining in your possession."

behind him, sir," replied the Master, "shall be dow, where it will be easily believed that Miss returned to him by my servant, as you do not show Ashton did not venture again to intrude upon me any credentials from him which entitle you to their conference. receive it."

"Well, Master," said Captain Craigengelt, with malice which even his fear of the consequences could not suppress,-" you have this morning done me an egregious wrong and dishonor, but far more to yourself. A castle, indeed!" he continued, looking around him, "why this is worse than a coupe-gorge house, where they receive travellers to plunder them of their property."

his cane, and making a grasp at the Captain's bri- upon young Ravenswood. dle, "if you do not depart without uttering another syllable, I will batoon you to death."

At the motion of the Master towards him the difficulty he escaped throwing down his horse. whose hoofs struck fire from the rocky pavevillage.

As Ravenswood turned round to leave the politeness, his interview with Craigengelt.

"I have seen," said the Lord Keeper, "that

"Craigengelt is the fellow's name," said the cannot be such a fool as to interpret actual ne- Master, "at least that by which he passes at

"Craig-in-guilt," said Caleb, punning upon the have employed the services of so slight and in- word craig, which in Scotch signifies throat; "if considerable a person as yourself upon such an he is Craig-in-guilt just now, he is as likely to be Craig-in-peril as ony chield I ever saw-the loon has woodie written on his very visonomy, and I "I slight and inconsiderable!" said Craigen- wad wager twa and a plack that hemp plaits his

"You understand physiognomy, good Mr. Cation before now-for I most distinctly recollect, "I can understand nothing upon your explana- that, upon occasion of a journey which I made Craigengelt, or whatever is his name, undergo a

> "Upon what account?" said the Master of Ravenswood, with some interest.

The question led immediately to a tale which and led him back towards the hall. "The answer to your question," he said, "though it is "Then, Master, you will at least cause to be a ridiculous business, is only fit for your own

As they entered the hall, he again took the "Whatever property Bucklaw may have left Master apart into one of the recesses of the win-

CHAPTER XVII.

--- Here is a father now. Will truck his daughter for a foreign venture, Make her the stop-gap to some canker'd feud, Or fling her o'er, like Jonah, to the fishes, To appease the sea at highest. ANONYMOUS.

THE Lord Keeper opened his discourse with an appearance of unconcern, marking, however, "You insolent rascal," said the Master, raising very carefully, the effect of his communication

"You are aware." he said, "my young friend. that suspicion is the natural vice of our unsettled times, and exposes the best and wisest of us to bully turned so rapidly round, that with some the imposition of artful rascals. If I had been disposed to listen to such the other day, or even if I had been the wily politician which you have ment, in every direction. Recovering him, how- been taught to believe me, you, Master of Raever, with the bridle, he pushed for the gate, and venswood, instead of being at freedom, and with rode sharply back again in the direction of the full liberty to solicit and act against me as you please, in defence of what you suppose to be your rights, would have been in the Castle of Edin- subjects for examination, the Lord Keeper went burgh, or some other state prison; or, if you had of fugitation."

"My Lord Keeper," said the Master, "I think ity, and partly to his daughter. you would not jest on such a subject-yet it seems impossible you can be in earnest."

"Innocence," said the Lord Keeper, "is also confident, and sometimes, though very excusably, presumptuously so."

"I do not understand," said Ravenswood, "how a consciousness of innocence can be, in any case, accounted presumptuous."

"Imprudent, at least, it may be called," said Sir William Ashton, "since it is apt to lead us into the mistake of supposing that sufficiently evident to others, of which, in fact, we are only conscious ourselves. I have known a rogue, for this very reason, make a better defence than an innocent man could have done in the same circumstances of suspicion. Having no consciousness of innocence to support him, such a fellow applies himself to all the advantages which the law will afford him, and sometimes (if his counsel be men of talent), succeeds in compelling his judges to receive him as innocent. I remember the celebrated case of Sir Coolie Condiddle, of Condiddle, who was tried for theft under trust, of which all the world knew him guilty, and yet ment on honester folk."

"Allow me to beg you will return to the point," said the Master; "you seemed to say that I had suffered under some suspicion."

"Suspicion, Master ?-ay, truly-and I can show you the proofs of it; if I happen only to have them with me.-Here, Lockhard "-His atparticular charge-d'ye hear?"

the Keeper continued, as if half speaking to him-

"I think the papers are with me-I think so, for as I was to be in this country, it was natural ever, at Ravenswood Castle, that I am sure of-so perhaps you might condescend-"

Here Lockhard entered, and put the leathern Keeper produced one or two papers, respecting the information laid before the Privy Council concerning the riot, as it was termed, at the funeral of Allan Lord Ravenswood, and the ac- you, my good Master, though your cause is so extive share he had himself taken in quashing cellent, might have pleaded it perhaps worse yourthe proceedings against the Master. These documents had been selected with care, so as to irritate the natural curiosity of Ravenswood upon and with that brief word, which the Keeper had such a subject without gratifying it, yet to show often lavished upon him, but which he himself hat Sir William Ashton had acted upon that trying occasion the part of an advocate and peacemaker betwixt him and the jealous authorities of honorable heart. The Master had been remarked to the breakfast-table, and entered into light conescaped that destiny, it must have been by flight versation, addressed partly to old Caleb, whose to a foreign country, and at the risk of a sentence resentment against the usurper of the Castle of Ravenswood began to be softened by his familiar-

> After perusing these papers, the Master of Ravenswood remained for a minute or two with his hand pressed against his brow, in deep and profound meditation. He then again ran his eye hastily over the papers, as if desirous of discovering in them some deep purpose, or some mark of fabrication, which had escaped him at first perusal. Apparently the second reading confirmed the opinion which had pressed upon him at the first, for he started from the stone bench on which he was sitting, and, going to the Lord Keeper, took his hand, and strongly pressing it. asked his pardon repeatedly for the injustice he had done him, when it appeared he was experiencing, at his hands, the benefit of protection to his person, and vindication to his character.

The statesman received these acknowledgments at first with well-feigned surprise, and then with an affectation of frank cordiality. The tears began already to start from Lucy's blue eyes at viewing this unexpected and moving scene. To see the Master, late so haughty and reserved, and whom she had always supposed the injured person, supplicating her father for forgiveness, was was not only acquitted, but lived to sit in judg- a change at once surprising, flattering, and affect-

"Dry your eyes, Lucy," said her father: "why should you weep because your father, though a lawyer, is discovered to be a fair and honorable man?-What have you to thank me for, my dear Master," he continued, addressing Ravenswood. "that you would not have done in my case? tendant came-"Fetch me the little private mail 'Suum cuique tribuito,' was the Roman justice, with the padlocks, that I recommended to your and I learned it when I studied Justinian. Besides, have ye not overpaid me a thousand times. "Yes, my lord." Lockhard vanished; and in saving the life of this dear child?"

"Yes," answered the Master, in all the remorse of self-accusation; "but the little service I did was an act of mere brutal instinct; your defence of my cause, when you knew how ill I for me to bring them with me. I have them, how- thought of you, and how much I was disposed to be your enemy, was an act of generous, manly, and considerate wisdom."

"Pshaw1" said the Lord Keeper, "each of scrutoire, or mail-box, into his hands. The us acted in his own way; you as a gallant soldier, I as an upright judge and privy-councillor. We could not, perhaps, have changed pasts-at least I should have made a very sorry Tauridor, and self, than I who acted for you before the council."

"My generous friend!" said Ravenswood :now pronounced for the first time, he gave to his feudal enemy the full confidence of a haughty but the day. Having furnished his host with such among his contemporaries for sense and acute-and irascible character. His prepossessions accordingly, however obstinate, were of a nature to lost your curiosity about this Craigengelt, my give way before love and gratitude; and the real charms of the daughter, joined to the supposed services of the father, cancelled in his memory the vows of vengeance which he had taken so deeply on the eve of his father's funeral. But they had been heard and registered in the book of

72

Caleb was present at this extraordinary scene, and he could conceive no other reason for a proceeding so extraordinary than an alliance betwixt the houses, and Ravenswood Castle assigned for the young lady's dowry. As for Lucy, when nonsense about your proposing to enter into the Ravenswood uttered the most passionate excuses for his ungrateful negligence, she could but smile through her tears, and, as she abandoned her hand to him, assure him, in broken accents, of the delight with which she beheld the complete reconciliation between her father and her deliverer. Even the statesman was moved and affected by the flery, unreserved, and generous self-abandon- yet "-shaking the Lord Keeper's hand-"and ment with which the Master of Ravenswood re- yet I am still more obliged to my honorable nounced his feudal enmity, and threw himself without hesitation upon his forgiveness. His eyes glistened as he looked upon a couple who returning the pressure; "but this gentlemanwere obviously becoming attached, and who this Mr. Hayston of Bucklaw-I am afraid the seemed made for each other. He thought how high the proud and chivalrous character of Ravenswood might rise under many circumstances, in which he found himself "over-crowed," to use a phrase of Spenser, and kept under, by his brief pedigree, and timidity of disposition. Then his daughter-his favorite child-his constant playmate-seemed formed to live happy in a union with such a commanding spirit as Ravenswood; and even the fine, delicate, fragile form of Lucy Ashton seemed to require the support of the Master's muscular strength and masculine character. And it was not merely during a few minutes that Sir William Ashton looked upon their marriage as a probable and even desirable event, for a full hour intervened ere his imagination was crossed by recollection of the Master's poverty, and the sure displeasure of Lady Ashton. It is certain, that the very unusual flow of kindly feeling with which the Lord Keeper had been thus surprised, was one of the circumstances which gave much tacit encouragement to the attachment between the Master and his daughter, and led both the lovers distinctly to believe that it was a connexion which would be most agreeable to him. He himself was supposed to have admitted this in effect, when, long after the catastrophe of their ove, he used to warn his hearers against permitting their feelings to obtain an ascendency over their judgment, and affirm, that the greatest misfortune of his life was owing to a very temporary predominance of sensibility over self-interest. It must be owned, if such was the case, he was long and severely punished for an offence of very brief

After some pause the Lord Keeper resumed

ness, as well as for his reserved, pertinacious, the conversation-" In your surprise at finding me an honester man than you expected, you have good Master; and yet your name was brought in, in the course of that matter, too."

"The scoundrel!" said Ravenswood; "my connexion with him was of the most temporary nature possible; and yet I was very foolish to hold any communication with him at all .- What did he say of me?"

"Enough," said the Keeper, "to excite the very loyal terrors of some of our sages, who are for proceeding against men on the mere grounds of suspicion or mercenary information .- Some service of France, or of the Pretender, I don't recollect which, but which the Marquis of A-, one of your best friends, and another person, whom some call one of your worst and most interested enemies, could not, somehow, be brought

"I am obliged to my honorable friend-and enemy."

"Inimicus amicissimus," said the Lord Keeper, poor young man-I heard the fellow mention his name-is under very bad guidance."

"He is old enough to govern himself," answered the Master.

"Old enough, perhaps, but scarce wise enough, if he has chosen this fellow for his fidus Achates. Why, he lodged an information against him-that is, such a consequence might have ensued from his examination, had we not looked rather at the character of the witness than the tenor of his evi-

"Mr. Hayston of Bucklaw," said the Master, "is, I believe, a most honorable man, and capable of nothing that is mean or disgraceful."

"Capable of much that is unreasonable, though; that you must needs allow, Master, Death will soon put him in possession of a fair estate, if he hath it not already; old Lady Girnington-an excellent person, excepting that her inveterate ill-nature rendered her intolerable to the whole world-is probably dead by this time. Six heirs portioners have successively died to make her wealthy. I know the estates well; they march* with my own-a noble property."

"I am glad of it," said Ravenswood, "and should be more so, were I confident that Bucklaw would change his company and habits with his fortunes. This appearance of Craigengelt, acting in the capacity of his friend, is a most vile augury for his future respectability."

"He is a bird of evil omen, to be sure," said the Keeper, "and croaks of jails and gallows-tree. But I see Mr. Caleb grows impatient for our re turn to breakfast."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Sir, stay at home, and take an old man's counsel; Seek not to bask ye i by a stranger's hearth; Our own blue smoke is warmer than their fire; Domestic food is wholesome, though 'tis homely, And foreign dainties poisonous, though tasteful. THE FRENCH COURTEZAN.

THE Master of Ravenswood took an opportunity to leave his guests to prepare for their departure, while he himself made the brief arrangements necessary previous to his absence from Wolf's Crag for a day or two. It was necessary to communicate with Caleb on this occasion, and he found that faithful servitor in his sooty and ruinous den, greatly delighted with the departure of their visitors, and computing how long, with good management, the provisions which had been unexpended might furnish forth the Master's table. "He's nae belly god, that's ae blessing; and Bucklaw's gane, that could have eaten a horse behind the saddle. Cresses or water-purpie, and a bit ait-cake, can serve the Master for breakfast as weel as Caleb. Then for dinnerthere's no muckle left on the spule-bane; it will brander, though-it will brander * very well."

His triumphant calculations were interrupted by the Master, who communicated to him, not without some hesitation, his purpose to ride with the Lord Keeper as far as Ravenswood Castle, and to remain there for a day or two.

"The mercy of Heaven forbid!" said the old serving-man, turning as pale as the table-cloth which he was folding up.

"And why, Caleb?" said his master, "why should the mercy of Heaven forbid my returning the Lord Keeper's visit?"

"O, sir!" replied Caleb-"O Mr. Edgar! I am your servant, and it ill becomes me to speakbut I am an auld servant-have served baith your father and gudesire, and mind to have seen Lord Randal, your great-grandfather-but that was when I was a hairn."

"And what of all this, Balderston?" said the Master: "what can it possibly have to do with my paying some ordinary civility to a neighbor?"

"O Mr. Edgar,-that is, my lord!" answered the butler, "your ain conscience tells you it isna any help could reach them." for your father's son to be neighboring wi' the like o' him-it isna for the credit of the family. An he were ance come to terms, and to gie ye back your ain, e'en though ye suld honor his house wi' your alliance, I suldna say na-for the young leddy is a winsome sweet creature-But keep your ain state wi' them-I ken the race o' them weel-they will think the mair o' ye."

"Why, now, you go farther than I do, Caleb," said the Master, drowning a certain degree of consciousness in a forced laugh; "you are for marrying me into a family that you will not allow me to visit-how's this ?-and you look as pale as death besides."

"O, sir," repeated Caleb again, "you would but laugh if I tauld it; but Thomas the Rhymer, whose tongue couldna be fause, spoke the wore of your house that will e'en prove ower true if you go to Ravenswood this day-O, that it should e'er have been fulfilled in my time!"

"And what is it, Caleb ?" said Ravenswood," wishing to soothe the fears of his old servant.

Caleb replied, "he had never repeated the lines to living mortal-they were told to him by an auld priest that had been confessor to Lord Allan's father when the family were catholic. But mony a time," he said, "I hae soughed thae dark words ower to mysell, and, well-a-day! little did I think of their coming round this day."

"Truce with your nonsense, and let me hear the doggerel which has put it into your head," said the Master, impatiently.

With a quivering voice, and a cheek pale with apprehension, Caleb faltered out the following

"When the last Laird of Ravenswood to Ravenswood shall ride, And woo a dead maiden to be his bride. He shall stable his steed in the Kelpie's flow, And his name shall be lost for evermoe!'

"I know the Kelpie's flow well enough," said the Master; "I suppose, at least, you mean the quicksand betwixt this tower and Wolf's-hope but why any man in his senses should stable a steed there-"

"Oh, never speer ony thing about that, sir-God forbid we should ken what the prophecy means-but just bide you at hame, and let the strangers ride to Ravenswood by themselves. We have done enough for them; and to do mair, would be mair against the credit of the family than in its favor."

"Well, Caleb," said the Master, "I give you the best possible credit for your good advice on this occasion; but as I do not go to Ravenswood to seek a bride, dead or alive, I hope I shall choose a better stable for my horse than the Kelpie's quicksand, and especially as I have always had a particular dread of it since the patrol of dragoons were lost there ten years since. My father and I saw them from the tower struggling against the advancing tide, and they were lost long before

'And they deserved it weel, the southern loons!" said Caleb; "what had they ado capering on our sands, and hindering a wheen honest folk frae bringing on shore a drap brandy? I hae seen them that busy, that I wad hae fired the auld culverin, or the demisaker that's on the south bartizan at them, only I was feared they might burst in the ganging aff."

Caleb's brain was now fully engaged with abuse of the English soldiery and excisemen, so that his master found no great difficulty in escaping from him and rejoining his guests. All was now ready for their departure; and one of the Lord Keeper's grooms having saddled the Master's steed, they mounted in the court-yard.

Caleb had, with much toil, opened the double doors of the outward gate, and thereat stationed

* i. e., They are bounded by my own.

himself, endeavoring, by the reverential, and, at the same time, consequential air which he as- gone." sumed, to supply, by his own gaunt, wasted, and thin person, the absence of a whole baronial es- ing his hold upon the Master's cloak, and chang sablishment of porters, warders, and liveried a cordial farewell, stooping at the same time from his horse, and sliding into the butler's hand the remuneration, which in those days was always given by a departing guest to the domestics of the family where he had been entertained. Lucy Mermaiden's Well-He's gane! he's down the smiled on the old man with her usual sweetness, path, arrowflight after her !- The head is as clean bade him adien, and deposited her guerdon with a grace of action and a gentleness of accent, wad chap the head aff a sybo!" which could not have failed to have won the faithful retainer's heart, but for Thomas the Rhymer, often clearing away the dew as it rose to his eyes, and the successful lawsuit against his master. As it was, he might have adopted the language of the Duke, in As You Like It-

"Thou wouldst have better pleased me with this deed, If thou hadst told me of another father."

Ravenswood was at the lady's bridle-rein, encouraging her timidity, and guiding her horse carefully down the rocky path which led to the moor, when one of the servants announced from the rear, that Caleb was calling loudly after them, desiring to speak with his master. Ravenswood felt it would look singular to neglect this summons, although inwardly cursing Caleb for his impertinent officiousness; therefore he was compelled to relinquish to Mr. Lockhard the agreeable duty in which he was engaged, and to ride back to the gate of the court-yard. Here he was beginning, somewhat peevishly, to ask Caleb the cause of his clamor, when the good old man exclaimed, "Whisht, sir! whisht, and let me speak just ae word that I couldna sae afore folk -there "-(putting into his lord's hand the money he had just received)-"there's three gowd pieces whisht now!" for the Master was beginning to exclaim against this transference-"never say a word, but just see to get them changed in the first town ve ride through, for they are bran new frae the mint, and kenspeckle a wee bit."

to force back the money on his servant, and extricate the bridle from his hold-"You forget that mixture of pleasure and anxiety, he anticipated I have some gold pieces left of my own. Keep the great things his young companion might these to yourself, my old friend; and, once more, achieve, were the breath of court-favor to fill his good day to you. I assure you I have plenty, sails. You know you have managed that our living should cost us little or nothing."

"Aweel," said Caleb, "these will serve for you another time; but see ye hae eneugh, for, doubtless, for the credit of the family, there mann be some civility to the servants, and ye maun hae something to mak a show with when they say, gifted, and highly connected-sure to float when-Master, will you bet a broad piece? Then ve maun tak out your purse, and say, I carena if I we are weak, in pedigree, and in the temper of a do; and tak care no to agree on the articles of the swordsman?-Sure no reasonable woman would wager, and just put up your purse again, and-" hesitate,-But, alas!"-Here his argument was

"This is intolerable, Caleb-I really must be

"And you will go, then?" said Caleb, loosen ing his didactics into a pathetic and mournful tone-"And you will go, for a' I have told you The Keeper returned his deep reverence with about the prophecy, and the dead bride, and the Kelpie's quicksand ?-Aweel! a wilful man maun hae his way-he that will to Cupar maun to Cupar. But pity of your life, sir, if ye be fowling or shooting in the park-beware of drinking at the ta'en aff the Ravenswood family this day, as I

> The old butler looked long after his master, that he might, as long as possible, distinguish his stately form from those of the other horsemen. "Close to her bridle-rein-ay, close to her bridlerein !- Wisely saith the holy man, 'By this also you may know that woman hath dominion over all men; '-and without this lass would not our ruin have been a'thegither fulfilled."

> With a heart fraught with such sad auguries did Caleb return to bis necessary duties at Wolf's Crag, as soon as he could no longer distinguish the object of his anxiety among the group of riders, which diminished in the distance.

In the meantime the party pursued their route joyfully. Having once taken his resolution, the Master of Ravenswood was not of a character to hesitate or pause upon it. He abandoned himself to the pleasure he felt in Miss Ashton's company, and displayed an assiduous gallantry, which approached as nearly to gaiety as the temper of his mind and state of his family permitted. The Lord Keeper was much struck with his depth of observation, and the unusual improvement which he had derived from his studies. Of these ac complishments Sir William Ashton's profession -and ye'll want siller upby yonder-But stay, and habits of society rendered him an excellent judge; and he well knew how to appreciate a quality to which he himself was a total stranger, -the brief and decided dauntlessness of the Master of Ravenswood's disposition, who seemed equally a stranger to doubt and to fear. In his "You forget, Caleb," said his master, striving heart the Lord Keeper rejoiced at having conciliated an adversary so formidable, while, with a

> "What could she desire?" he thought, his mind always conjuring up opposition in the person of Lady Ashton to his now prevailing wish-"What could a woman desire in a match, more than the sopiting of a very dangerous claim, and the alliance of a son-in-law, noble, brave, wellever the tide sets his way-strong, exactly where word. "To prefer some clownish Merse laird to pose themselves, and prosecute their journey in the afternoon.

tality; and the most marked attention was offered to the Master of Ravenswood, in particular, by their noble entertainers. The truth was, that Lord Bittlebrains had obtained his peerage by a good deal of plausibility, an art of building up a character for wisdom upon a very trite style of dering certain political services to those who could best reward them. His lady and he not feeling quite easy under their new honors, to with the cordiality which their late intercourse which use had not adapted their feelings, were very desirous to procure the fraternal countenance of those who were born denizens of the timated the ceremony of reception by a deep regions into which they had been exalted from a lower sphere. The extreme attention which they paid to the Master of Ravenswood, had its usual effect in exalting his importance in the eyes of the Lord Keeper, who, although he had a reasonable degree of contempt for Lord Bittlebrains' general parts, entertained a high opinion of the

"I wish Lady Ashton had seen this," was his internal reflection; "no man knows so well as and he fawns on the Master like a beggar's messan on a cook. And my lady, too, bringing forward her beetle-browed misses to skirl and play apon the virginals, as if she said, pick and choose. They are no more comparable to Lucy than an owl is to a cygnet, and so they may carry their black brows to a farther market."

who had still to measure the longest part of their journey, resumed their horses; and after the Lord Keeper, the Master, and the domestics, had cade resumed its progress.

leading directly to the front of the house, flanked with hugh elm-trees, which sighed to the nightwind, as if they compassionated the heir of their shades in the society, and almost in the retinue, of their new master. Some feelings of the same stopped by the consciousness that Lady Ashton hitherto waited with such devotion. He well was not always reasonable, in his sense of the recollected the period, when, at the same hour in the evening, he had accompanied his father, as · the gallant young nobleman, and to the secure that nobleman left, never again to return to it, the possession of Ravenswood upon terms of easy mausion from which he derived his name and compromise -- it would be the act of a madwo-title. The extensive front of the old castle, on which he remembered having often looked back, Thus pondered the veteran politician, until was then "as black as mourning weed." The they reached Bittlebrains' House, where it had same front now glanced with many fights, some been previously settled they were to dine and re-throwing far forward into the night a fixed and stationary blaze, and others hurrying from one window to another, intimating the bustle and They were received with an excess of hospibusy preparations preceding their arrival, which had been intimated by an avant-courier. The contrast pressed so strongly upon the Master's heart, as to awaken some of the sterner feelings with which he had been accustomed to regard the new lord of his paternal domain, and to impress his countenance with an air of severe gravity, commonplace eloquence, a steady observation of when, alighted from his horse, he stood in the the changes of the times, and the power of ren- hall, no longer his own, surrounded by the numerous menials of its present owner.

The Lord Keeper, when about to welcome him seemed to render proper, became aware of the change, refrained from his purpose, and only inreverence to his guest, seeming thus delicately to share the feelings which predominated on his

Two upper domestics, bearing each a huge pair of silver candlesticks, now marshalled the company into a large saloon, or withdrawing room, where new alterations impressed upon acuteness of his judgment in all matters of self- Ravenswood the superior wealth of the present inhabitants of the castle. The mouldering tapestry, which, in his father's time had half covered the walls of this stately apartment, and half Bittlebrains on which side his bread is buttered; streamed from them in tatters, had given place to a complete finishing of wainscot, the cornice of which, as well as the frames of the various compartments, were ornamented with festoons of flowers and with birds, which, though carved in oak, seemed, such was the art of the chisel, actually to swell their throats, and flutter their wings, Several old family portraits of armed heroes of The entertainment being ended, our fravellers, the house of Ravenswood, together with a suit or two of old armor and some military weapons, had given place to those of King William and Queen Mary, of Sir Thomas Hope and Lord Stair, two drunk doch-an-dorroch, or the stirrup-cup, in the distinguished Scottish lawyers. The pictures of liquors adapted to their various ranks, the caval- the Lord Keeper's father and mother were also to be seen; the latter, sour, shrewish, and solemn, It was dark by the time they entered the ave- in her black hood and close pinners, with a book nue of Ravenswood Castle, a long straight line of devotion in her hand; the former, exhibiting beneath a black silk Geneva cowl, or skull-cap, which sat as close to the head as if it had been shaven, a pinched, peevish, puritanical set of feaancient proprietors, who now returned to their tures, terminating in a hungry, reddish, peaked beard, forming on the whole a countenance in the expression of which the hypocrite seemed to conkind oppressed the mind of the Master himself. tend with the miser and the knave. And it is to He gradually became silent, and dropped a little make room for such scarecrows as these, thought behind the lady, at whose bridle-rein he had Ravenswood, that my ancestors have been torn looked at them again, and, as he looked, the recollection of Lncy Ashton (for she had not entered the apartment with them) seemed less live- armor and portraits in this apartment-may I ask ly in his imagination. There were also two or three Dutch drolleries, as the pictures of Ostade and Teniers were then termed, with one good painting of the Italian school. There was, besides, a noble full length of the Lord Keeper in his robes of office, placed beside his lady in silk and ermine-a haughty beauty, bearing in her they are safe-I am sure I gave orders-may I looks all the pride of the House of Douglas, from which she was descended. The painter, notwithstanding his skill, overcome by the reality, or, perhaps, from a suppressed sense of humor, had not been able to give the husband on the canvas that air of awful rule and right supremacy, which indicates the full possession of domestic authori- room. ty. It was obvious, at the first glance, that, despite mace and gold frogs, the Lord Keeper was somewhat henpecked. The floor of this fine saloon was laid with rich carpets, huge fires blazed in the double chimneys, and ten silver sconces, reflecting with their bright plates the lights which the Mull of Galloway." they supported, made the whole seem as brilliant as day.

"Would you choose any refreshment, Master?" said Sir William Ashton, not unwilling to break the awkward silence.

He received no answer, the Master being so busily engaged in marking the various changes which had taken place in the apartment, that he hardly heard the Lord Keeper address him. A repetition of the offer of refreshment, with the addition, that the family meal would be presently ready, compelled his attention, and reminded him, that he acted a weak, perhaps even a ridiculous part, in suffering himself to be overcome by the circumstances in which he found himself. He compelled himself, therefore, to enter into conappearance of indifference as he could well com-

"You will not be surprised, Sir William, that I am interested in the changes you have made for self." the better in this apartment. In my father's time after our misfortunes compelled him to live in retirement, it was little used, except by me as a me to go abroad. In that recess was my little work-shop, where I treasured the few carpenter's tools which old Caleb procured for me, and taught me how to use-there, in yonder corner, under that handsome silver sconce, I kept my fishingrods, and hunting poles, bows, and arrows."

"I have a young birkie," said the Lord Keeper, willing to change the tone of the conversation, "of much the same turn-He is never happy, save when he is in the field-I wonder he is not here. -Here, Lockhard-send William Shaw for Mr. Henry-I suppose he is, as usual, tied to Lucy's . pron-string-that foolish girl, Master, draws the is the Master of Ravenswood." whole family after her at her pleasure."

down from the walls which they erected. He fully thrown out, did not recall Ravenswood from his own topic.

"We were obliged to leave," he said, "some where they have been removed to ? "

"Why," answered the Keeper, with some hesttation, "the room was fitted up in our absenceand cedant arma togæ, is the maxim of lawyers, you know-I am afraid it has been here somewhat too literally complied with. I hope-I believe hope that when they are recovered, and put in proper order, you will do me the honor to accept them at my hand, as an atonement for their accidental derangement?"

The Master of Ravenswood bowed stiffly, and, with folded arms, again resumed his survey of the

Henry, a spoilt boy of fifteen, burst 100 the room, and ran up to his father. "Think of Lucy, papa; she has come home so cross and so fractious, that she will not go down to the stable to see my new pony, that Bob Wilson brought from

"I think you were very unreasonable to ask her." said the Keeper.

"Then you are as cross as she is," answered the boy; "but when mamma comes home, she'll claw up both your mittens."

"Hush your impertinence, you little forward imp!" said his father; "where is your

"Gone to a wedding in Dunbar-I hope he'll get a haggis to his dinner;" and he began to sing the old Scottish song,

> "There was a haggis in Dunbar, Fal de ral. &c. Mony better and few waur, Fal de ral, &c."

"I am much obliged to Mr. Cordery for his versation with Sir William Ashton, with as much attentions," said the Lord Keeper; "and pray who has had the charge of you while I was away, Mr. Henry ?"

"Norman and Bob Wilson--forby my own

"A groom and a gamekeeper, and your own silly self-proper guardians for a young advocate !- Why, you will never know any statutes but playroom, when the weather would not permit those against shooting red-deer, killing salmon,

> "And speaking of red-game," said the young scapegrace, interrupting his father without scruple or hesitation, "Norman has shot a buck, and I showed the branches to Lucy, and she says they have but eight tynes; and she says that you killed a deer with Lord Bittlebrains' hounds, when you were west away, and, do you know, she says it had ten tynes-is it true?"

"It may have had twenty, Henry, for what I know; but if you go to that gentleman, he can tell you all about it-Go speak to him, Henry-it

While they conversed thus, the father and son Even this allusion to his daughter, though art- were standing by the are; and the Master having walked towards the upper end of the apartment, return. The exquisite feminine beauty of her stood with his back towards them, apparently engaged in examining one of the paintings. The boy ran up to him, and pulled him by the skirt of the coat with the freedom of a spoilt child, sayface, he became suddenly and totally disconcerted -walked two or three steps backward, and still wonder, which had totally banished from his features their usual expression of pert vivacity.

hunt."

"Go to the gentleman, Henry," said his father; "you are not used to be so shy."

But neither invitation nor exhortation had any effect on the boy. On the contrary, he turned round as soon as he had completed his survey of the Master, and, walking as cautiously as if he had been treading upon eggs, he glided back to his father, and pressed as close to him as possible. Ravenswood, to avoid hearing the dispute betwixt the father and the over-indulged boy, thought it most polite to turn his face once more towards the pictures, and pay no attention to what they said.

"Why do you not speak to the Master, you little fool?" said the Lord Keeper.

"I am afraid," said Henry, in a very low tone

"Afraid, you goose!" said his father, giving him a slight shake by the collar,-" What makes you afraid ? "

"What makes him so like the picture of Sir Malise Ravenswood, then?" said the boy, whis-

"What picture, you natural?" said his father. "I used to think you only a scape-grace, but I believe you will turn out a born idiot."

"I tell you it is the picture of old Malise of Ravenswood, and he is as like it as if he had loupen out of the canvas; and it is up in the old Baron's hall that the maids launder the clothes in, and it has armor, and not a coat like the gentleman-and he has not a beard and whiskers like the picture -and it has another kind of thing about the throat, and no band-strings as he has-and-"

"And why should not the gentleman be like his ancestor, you silly boy?" said the Lord Keeper.

"Ay; but if he is come to chase us all out of the castle," said the boy, "and has twenty men at his back in disguise-and is come to say, with a hollow voice, I bide my time-and is to kill you on the hearth as Malise did the other man, and whose blood is still to be seen!"

"Hush! nonsense!" said the Lord Keeper, not himself much pleased to hear these disagrecable coincidences forced on his notice.-" Master, here comes Lockhard to say supper is served."

And, at the same instant, Lucy entered at another door, having changed her dress since her regimen.

countenance, now shaded only by a profusion of sunny tresses; the sylph-like form disencumbered of her heavy riding-skirt, and mantled in azure silk; the grace of her manner and of her smile. ing, "I say, sir-if you please to tell me"-but cleared, with a celerity which surprised the Maswhen the Master turned round, and Henry saw his ter himself, all the gloomy and unfavorable thoughts which had for some time overclouded his fancy. In those features, so simply sweet, he gazed on Ravenswood with an air of fear and could trace no alliance with the pinched visage of the peak-bearded, black-capped puritan, or his starch-withered spouse, with the craft expressed "Come to me, young gentleman," said the in the Lord Keeper's countenance, or the haughti-Master, "and I will tell you all I know about the ness which predominated in that of his lady: and, while he gazed on Lucy Ashton, she seemed to be an angel descended on earth, unallied to the coarser mortals among whom she deigned to dwell for a season. Such is the power of beauty over a youthful and enthusiastic fancy.

CHAPTER XIX.

-I do too ill in this. And must not think but that a parent's plaint Will move the heavens to pour forth misery Upon the head of disobediency. Yet reason tells us, parents are o'erseen, When with too strict a rein they do hold in Their child's affection, and control that love Which the high powers divine inspire them with. THE HOG HATH LOST HIS PEARL.

THE feast of Ravenswood Castle was as remarkable for its profusion, as that of Wolf's Crag had been for its ill-veiled penury. The Lord Keeper might feel internal pride at the contrast, but he had too much tact to suffer it to appear. On the contrary, he seemed to remember with pleasure what he called Mr. Balderston's bachelor's meal, and to be rather disgusted than pleased with the display upon his own groaning

"We do these things," he said, "because others do them-but I was bred a plain man at my father's frugal table, and I should like well, would my wife and family permit me, to return to my sowens and my poor-man-of-mutton." *

This was a little overstretched. The Master only answered, "That different ranks-I mean."

* The blade-bone of a shoulder of mutton is called in Scot land "a poor man," as in some parts of England it is termed ". poor knight of Windsor;" in contrast, it must be presumed, to the baronial Sir Loin. It is said, that in the last age an old Scottish peer, whose conditions (none of the most gentle) were marked by a strange and fierce-looking exaggeration of the Highland countenance, chanced to be indisposed while he was in London attending Parliament. The master of the hotel where he lodged, anxious to show attention to his noble guest, waited on him to enumerate the contents of his well-stocked larder, so as to endeavor to hit on something which might suit his appetite. "I think, landlord," said his lordship, rising up from his couch, and throwing back the tartan plaid with which he had screened his grim and ferocious visage-" I think I could eat a morsel of a poor man," The landlord fled in terror, having no doubt that his guest was a cannibal, who might be in the habit of eating a slice of a tenant, as light food, when he was under